Médecins Sans Frontières (MSF) provides humanitarian medical aid in more than 70 countries around the world

Today, 65 million people are displaced by conflict, violence, and natural hazards. The high level of violence of crises throws hundreds of thousands of human beings on dangerous and risky routes seeking refuge in a safer environment.

MSF provides assistance to populations caught in war and to people on the move fleeing repression, poverty, or violence. Our teams respond to other emergencies caused by outbreaks such as Ebola and natural disasters and provide care and treatment for patients with diseases such as tuberculosis and HIV.

10 million outpatients seen by MSF in 2017

Despite volatile environments, MSF's dedicated teams care for pregnant women and newborns, treat the wounded and people with medical emergencies, manage chronic illnesses, and respond to disease outbreaks, notably through vaccination campaigns. MSF also works to meet other vital needs for vulnerable people such as clean water, sanitation and malnutrition.

MSF is the largest non-governmental provider of tuberculosis worldwide. MSF treated over 3,000 patients for drug-resistant forms of the disease in 2017.

[Médecins Sans Frontières / Doctors Without Borders (MSF)]

Médecins Sans Frontières (MSF) is an international, independent, medical humanitarian organisation, founded in 1971. In over 70 countries around the world, MSF provides urgent medical humanitarian assistance for people in need caught in conflict zones, epidemics, natural disasters, or exclusion from health care.

Over 40,000 MSF aid workers work in extremely difficult and neglected places around the world. MSF aid workers are professionals in various fields such as doctors, nurses, logisticians, administrators, and mental health specialists. MSF actions are based on medical ethics, and delivery of medical aid to people, regardless of their race, religion, gender, or political affiliation based on an independent assessment of people's needs.

Our independence is facilitated by our policy to allow only a very small portion of our funds to come from governments and intergovernmental organisations. Ninety-five percent of MSF's funding comes from individual donors and private corporations.

MSF was awarded the Seoul Peace Prize in 1996 and the Nobel Peace Prize in 1999.
