“Reinvention and Resilience: The Courage to Let Go and Begin Again”

In a world where change never stops, the hardest part isn't doing new things - it's letting go of how we used to do them. Today, globalization, technology and shifting economic realities have made stability feel like a relic of the past. Careers that once promised security now demand continuous adaptation, curiosity and reinvention.

In this fireside conversation, Aga Giedroyc and Kanpassorn reflect on careers shaped by bold leaps each decade—navigating markets across continents, leading through disruption, and embracing the uncomfortable moments that fuel growth. They share insights on unlearning, identity shifts, and how confronting uncertainty can expand our imagination and empower us to reinvent how we show up for ourselves, our teams, and our organisations.

Because in a world that refuses to stand still, our greatest strength is the courage to evolve—again and again.
